Opportunity

Social media has leveled the playing field, allowing small, boutique stores, hotels and restaurants to compete effectively against major brands without large outlays of advertising dollars. The move has forced many major brands to reinvent the customer experience, finding and investing in new ways to engage with customers online before, during and after the sale.

Delivering an Exceptional Experience

One way in which restaurant owners and managers are stepping up their game is by offering customers free WiFi accompanied by a customized mobile app that serves up frequent deals, rewards loyalty, and encourages spontaneous business.

A bluetooth-capable WiFi access point can even become an advertising beacon that lets restaurant owners push offers and coupons to their apps running on customer devices. When a customer with a restaurant's app on their mobile device comes in close proximity to the restaurant, a coupon can automatically be sent, offering, for example, a free appetizer with the purchase of two entrees.

During peak dining hours, offering free WiFi has been shown to encourage customers to wait longer for available seating. WiFi supports the use of portable ordering and point-of-payment devices, allowing servers to move about freely and serve customers using these WiFi-capable devices.
